The UN Agenda for Sustainable Development was adapted on the United Nation Summit in New York in September 2015. The Agenda includes 17 Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) and represents a key platform for addressing today's most important challenges in their interconnected economic, social and environmental dimension. This Agenda is a plan of action for people, planet prosperity, peace and partnership, expecting from the states to engage and to ensure that "no one will be left behind". The Agenda 2030 calls on the states to build a practical and ambitious national solutions to ensure its overall implementation, while involving all stakeholders of sustainable development - state and local authorities, civil society, academia and private sector.
